2013/2014 UNIZIK POST UTME QUESTIONS

The earthly paradise of Bali and of the South Sea Islands, and of the gentle, non-acquisitive civilization of Burma have been aptly described and romanticized. One can add to them the Nicobar Islands, where a small population lives happily on a very low cultural level. But perhaps the most remarkable and the least known of these earthly paradises is the small kingdom of Hunza in the Himalayas, which was recently visited and enthusiastically described by the journalist.

Noel Baber (daily mail, 5, 6, 8 June 1962).

A fair-skinned population of 18,000, they live in a fertile and almost inaccessible valley not far from the Sinkiang border, 8,000 feet up. A legend has it they are the descendants of three deserters from the army of Alexander the Great, who settle here with Persian wives - which makes one inclined to believe pacifism may be hereditary, because they had no war in 2,000 years, they have no money, no crime and no diseases, they rarely die before ninety. Their psychosomatic control is almost unbelievable, child birth is painless and toothache a joke. They keep their numbers stationary without contraceptive and without abortion, but by sheer abstinence, though Noel Barber saw the new born son of a chuckling father aged eighty-nine. Their diet which consists of apricots and raw vegetables, may have something to do with their unshakeable serenity. It makes one gasp with surprise that human nature can be like this. One is reminded of Huxley's island, but unlike the paleness, the Hunza people have no art, only serenity!
